WHITENESS ALONE WON'T DO!

OMO makes whites Bright!

"This'll shake you, Mother!"

Fancy saying all washing powders were the same! You can't say that any more—not after you've seen Omo-brightness. Whites boiled with Omo are more than clean and white. They're bright. Actually bright!"

Yes, she's right about Omo. This wonderful new detergent really does add brightness to whiteness.

This exciting new Omo-brightness puts ordinary whiteness completely in the shade. Many powders get things clean and white. Omo does this—and much more. Omo-boiled whites are clean, white and bright as well! Yes, brilliantly bright!

Today millions of women insist on this extra Omo-brightness, every washday. One packet—and you'll be an Omo fan, too!

Calls for criminal inquiry as top ministers deny security leak

Francis Elliott Political Editor

Jeremy Hunt led a chorus of denials from senior ministers last night that they were responsible for the first known leak from Britain's top national security body.

Theresa May came under pressure to allow a police inquiry into the disclosure of secret talks from the National Security Council (NSC) about the Chinese telecoms company Huawei.

Mr Hunt, the foreign secretary, said that neither he nor any of his team had disclosed details of Tuesday's meeting. That prompted an awkward scramble from other ministers to distance themselves from the leak.

Gavin Williamson, the defence secretary, and Sajid Javid, the home secretary, issued categorical denials while aides to Penny Mordaunt, the aid secretary, and Liam Fox, the trade secretary, insisted that neither was guilty.

Mrs May refused to confirm that a formal inquiry was under way but Whitehall is prepared for one led by the police. Sir Mark Sedwill, the cabinet secretary, is said to be determined to draw a line. Jeremy Wright, the culture secretary, told the Commons in reply to an urgent question: "We cannot exclude the possibility of a criminal investigation."

He added: "Officials, including the security and intelligence agencies, need to feel that they can give advice to ministers which ministers will treat seriously and keep private."

"If they do not feel that, they will not give us that advice and government will be worse as a result. That is why this is serious and that is why the government intends to treat it seriously."

Sir Michael Fallon, the former defence secretary, urged Downing Street to call in the police. "That would involve a proper Scotland Yard investigation of all those who attended the Fee-paying schools 'save the taxpayer £20 billion'

Independent heads hit back against VAT threat

Nicola Woolcock
Education Correspondent

Private schools are saving taxpayers billions of pounds a year, their head teachers have said in a forceful defence of the sector.

The heads used their annual report yesterday to assert the financial benefits of fee-charging schools and the good they are doing for society.

The schools save the taxpayer more than £20 billion a year by educating pupils who would otherwise need state places and by providing employment, community facilities and tax contributions, an analysis for the Independent Schools Council (ISC) has found.

Private schools have come under pressure from both main parties, with questions raised over their social contribution and whether they should continue to enjoy charitable status.

Labour has vowed to add VAT to private school fees to pay for free school meals for state primary pupils. Theresa May also threatened to change their charitable status in the last Tory manifesto, although this idea has since been abandoned.

Oxford Economics found that private schools saved the taxpayer £35 billion last year because children were not taking up state school places. In addition they and their suppliers paid £4.1 billion in tax. Their gross domestic product, the value of the work they supported across the economy through their spending, was £137 billion. They also supported 302,000 jobs, more than the city of Liverpool, the analysis claimed.

However, the report also revealed that fees were up by 3.7 per cent compared with last year, the biggest rise in five years. Experts said that private schools were losing middle-class good-will and should substantially cut fees.

Families using private schools pay an average £14,289 a child, and boarding fees in London have reached £40,000 on average. Fees should be cut by 30 per cent over the next ten years, according to Ralph Lucas, editor-in-chief of The Good Schools Guide. This would cancel out the impact of putting VAT on school fees, which Labour proposes.

"Many traditional backers of private education find themselves being priced out of the market and as a result struggle to raise a spirited defence of schools from which they and their middle-class supporters no longer benefit," he said.

The ISC said that families received more than £1 billion of help with fees. Of the £864 million provided by schools themselves, only £422 million went on means-tested bursaries and scholarships, although this was £24 million more than in 2017.

Barnaby Lenon, chairman of the ISC, said: "It is hugely encouraging to see an increase once again in means-tested bursary provision for lower-income families. We have seen schools embark upon ambitious fundraising campaigns to support this important work."

Critics said that change was too

Sleep well — things really will be better by morning

Tom Whipple Science Editor

Sleeping on a problem really does make it better, especially when that problem is your rendition of Total Eclipse of the Heart during a karaoke session.

Scientists have found that a good night's sleep helps us to rationalise embarrassing experiences. However, for people who suffer from insomnia, there is no such effect, creating a vicious circle that may reinforce sleeplessness.

"Insomnia is not only a disorder of sleep, but also of feeling tense all day," Eus van Someren, from the Netherlands Institute for Neuroscience, said.

"We reasoned: what if this is where it starts, not in a failing sleep regulation, but in a failure to get rid of tension?"

The research, in the journals Brain and Sleep, investigated this using sophisticated brain scanners and karaoke.

To track how people recovered from shame, the scientists recruited volunteers, half normal sleepers and half with insomnia, and asked them to put on headphones and sing along with a song. Because they could not hear themselves, this almost guaranteed they would be out of tune. Then they played them back the sound of their singing, and watched them cringe.

In the first experiment, involving 64 people, they asked them to fill out a survey that assessed their shame, then repeated the playback and the survey after they had slept. People who had slept well felt better about their singing, while those with insomnia did not.

In the second experiment, involving 57 people, they scanned each subject's brains when listening to their solo, and when asking them to recall something shameful they did in the past. Although sleepers and non-sleepers had similar brain activity when recalling the singing, when recalling a past shame, those who slept well responded differently, implying that the effect had softened.

Professor Van Someren argued this also gave a clue as to the cause of insomnia itself. "It is easy to imagine that one cannot get rid of the emotions of today [but] takes them to tomorrow, meaning tension increases all the time."
